Document Text

Al Qaeda terrorists were developing special new camera bombs to sneak past airport security in a plot foiled by U.S. intelligence, it was revealed yesterday.

The chilling summer-2003 plot that targeted the East Coast was among the 10 major foiled al Qaeda attacks mentioned by President Bush in a speech last October.

But a recent Department of Homeland Security report on aviation security gave new details.

It said al Qaeda cells were trying to develop bomb-laden cameras and planned to use flash attachments as stun guns in a series of attacks on international commercial flights, according to the report first revealed on the ABC News Web site.
